1. [REDACTED] Received a call from Jack Hamilton in the office of Representative Michael Harrington (D., Mass.), who inquired about our "Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, D. C. 20505" address. He wondered why there was no street address given. I explained that this is our standard mailing address which would bring mail to our central mail-room, from which it would be appropriately distributed. I noted that many Government agencies have general "Washington, D. C." addresses with respective ZIP codes. He then asked how he would send something to our Rosslyn office; I suggested he mail it to the standard address and it would be forwarded to the appropriate office. I also noted that anything coming from a congressional office would be sent to the Legislative Counsel as the responsible liaison office and then forwarded to another office as appropriate.
